Starting Out in the Evening - Wikipedia

"Starting Out in the Evening" is a film about people who think literature is worth devoting a lifetime to. People who think great novelists are a species of saint. It honors values that seem obsolete in our trashy popular culture, obsessed with the sex lives of vacuumheads.

Starting Out in the Evening Movie Review (2007) | Roger Ebert

It doesn't take much to satisfy me, I can pretty much call the good in any movie I watch, but Starting Out in the Evening had real quality to it and profundity that I haven't seen in a while. The acting was superb and I could really feel the pain and frustration of Frank Langella's character. I'm glad it wasn't expensive but even if I had paid ...

All that remains for Leonard Schiller (Frank Langella) is to finish the novel he has been laboring on for almost ten years. With his four earlier books out of print, he has learned to starve himself of the desire for the success he was once so close to, though beneath this practice lives a pull for his work to be rediscovered. His solitary writer's life is shaken by the arrival of Heather ...
