Historic tree stumps. Some of the earliest evidence of a European presence in New Zealand is found in the far south-west of the South Island. When James Cook rested up in Dusky Sound in the autumn of 1773 after arduous voyages towards Antarctica, one of the tasks he had his party complete was accurately fixing the geographical position of New Zealand.

Adjective. This most fastidious of pianists sounds anything but neurotic when he plays Mozart. — Richard Coles, Times Literary Supplement, 15 Nov. 2002 Maybe it's because novelists don't talk much about each other. Maybe this is because novelists secrete a certain BO which only other novelists detect, like certain buzzards who emit a repellent pheromone detectable only by other buzzards ...

3. FARMING IN THE AONB By medieval times, most of the rural population in Suffolk lived on the heavier, more productive Boulder Clay lands of High Suffolk, west of today's A12 trunk road. East of that line, the acid, arid and infertile soils of the Sandlings ensured the population was sparsely scattered in farms, hamlets and small villages.
