I believe the reason there's no straightforward property to access the selected row of a WPF DataGrid is because a DataGrid's selection mode can be set to either the row-level or the cell-level. Therefore, the selection-related properties and events are all written against cell-level selection - you'll always have selected cells regardless of the grid's selection mode, but you aren't ...

It's a little trickier to do what you're trying to do than I'd prefer, but that's because you don't really directly bind a DataGridView to a DataTable.. When you bind DataGridView.ItemsSource to a DataTable, you're really binding it to the default DataGridView, not to the table itself. This is why, for instance, you don't have to do anything to make a DataGridView sort rows when you click on a column header ...
