Repeat that sentence and see how easily you believe it. Then you will grasp my difficulties." Pears's tale turns back on itself and into the past until, deep into the book, we find that our first narrator has gone underground and none other than Stone is telling his own tale, which by this time has gotten deliciously tangled.

STONE'S FALL by iain Pears | Kirkus Reviews

"Stone's Fall" begins with a funeral in Paris in 1953, and then lurches back to London in 1909 and the fall through a window in St. James's Square by the munitions magnate John Stone, Lord Ravenscliff. Elizabeth, Lady Ravenscliff, hires a young crime reporter, Matthew Braddock, to investigate.

STONE'S FALL by Iain Pears is one of those books that just looks intimidating. Even in paperback it's a great big doorstopper of a thing - 597 pages long. One of those books that you wonder if you can risk reading in bed, what with a tendency to doze off and the potential for blackened eyes and badly squished noses.

Stone's Fall eBook: Iain Pears: Amazon.co.uk: Kindle Store

Iain Pears' novel Stone's Fall is incredibly complex. It is told from the perspective of three narrators, during three time periods, and in three separate settings. It also travels backwards through time. Pears' pieced together a historical mystery that simply broaches espionage, international finance, and military arms production.

With 2011 coming to an end, like a lot of bloggers I've been putting together a list of my favourite books read this year. One of the books on my list is Stone's Fall by Iain Pears, which I finished a couple of weeks ago but haven't had a chance to post about yet, so I thought it would make sense to tell you about the book today before posting my Top Books of 2011 later in the week.

Stone's Fall by Iain Pears - She Reads Novels

The first part is by far the worst, and if I hadn't read other I.Pears books before, I would have given up on "Stone's fall" early on. It's dull, perhaps deliberately. The narrator is an poorly educated journalist from lower class background, who has the job of investigating life of a famous financier -but who doesn't understand finance, and isn't ...
