Some Rain Must Fall: And Other Stories is a collection by Michel Faber, all stories published in 2000. I'm a great fan of The Crimson Petal and the White and The Book of Strange New Things and after Faber transported me to strange new worlds with each new novel, I was curious where he'd take me with fifteen short stories, particularly which genre they'd fall under.

Scott A - "Into each life some rain must fall" - don't know if this is the first appearance of this line, but it is truly about the only part of this poem that I like. Even the old classics tend to bore me, sometimes. I know many people consider this a great poem, but, I am convinced that many pieces written by some of these men are just common poems given weight by heavy bylines...
