So any help would be useful. At our shop we use CS3. Usually when creating our artwork for print we use this work flow: 1. Flatten transparency 2. Save as .EPS 3. Distillation (PDF/X-1a;2001) This creates small, strange, artifact looking lines throughout the document. These do not print and if you zoom in on them in acrobat they disappear which would lead one to assume that they do no exist.

Oh, sorry - I totally misread your question. Most graphics cards (IGPs) have dedicated video decode hardware built in. That means that well programmed software can take key stages of the video decode process away from the CPU and allow it to be completed by those hardware resources, which are tailor-made to decode video.
